READERS' VIEWPOINT

Letters to the Editor on Current Topics

In Defense of Macadam Roads To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir-George Nox McCain's article in the Evening Public Ledgen of April 24, describing the present situation with regard to the highway program in Pennsylvania, brings out a number of points to which the general public, and more especially the road-using public, in have probably given little thought. be The movement of heavily laden trucks 'yo macadam pavement on the Philadel-phia-Trenton road, it is doubtful whether apything else could properly be expected considering the aggravated conditions of heavy traffic narrowness and poor drainage conditions; and there can be no doubt that a pavement from which could be cut "cubes of solid constructed eight inches in diameter and fourteen inches thick," as described by Mr. McCain, would be infinitely better fact that the thickness mentioned is just about double that which is commonly used and that the cost of such a road would be prohibitive.

It is not, however, prepare to draw monly used and that the cost of such a road would be prohibitive.

It is not, however proper to draw the conclusion that the old macadam roads can serve no useful purpose simply because of the failure of this particular stretch. Covered with treatments of various bituminous materials, they are frequently transformed to such a degree that the traveling public does not recognize that they are riding on a road of macadam type, and in countless instances they are still to be found successfully carrying large volumes of traffic even though this may be less severe than the traffic on the tr

To summarize the above, it seems fair to conclude that in road building, just as in any other pursuit, the use of a single key in the hope of opening the door to success, or the following of a single formula regardless of all the variety of conditions to be met and overcome, must in the long run prove to be incorrect. The laying down of the broad rule that a given type of road has no value in any locality because of its failure in most densely populated localities to which it is no longer suited, would inevitably mean the loss of a vast sum of money previously invested in the construction of these roads, not to mention the very considerable amount which would be required for the mere purpose of digging them up and hashing them away.
